More about us IBM buys the Fossil Group Information technology giant IBM is acquiring the Fossil Group, a designer and manufacturer of watches and other accessories for the fashion industry, for $2.4 billion. The deal marks IBM's first foray into the high-end fashion market, the world of accessories and fine timepieces, in nearly four decades. "We are delighted to partner with Fossil," IBM CEO Ginni Rometty said in a statement Tuesday. "This unique company brings an incredible track record in design, fashion, and innovation to IBM." IBM has been on a roll recently, buying several companies and adding 1,500 new technology professionals since the start of the year. The acquisition is the company's latest acquisition, but it is the first to include a luxury business, says IBM. IBM has also been seeking to expand its role in the growing area of wearables, including watches, rings and jewelry. Fossil employs 4,000 people and reported sales of $916 million for its fiscal year ended June 2016. The deal is expected to close in the first quarter of 2017. Tiger Woods to donate cut out of swing Tiger Woods is set to announce a new charitable initiative in the coming weeks, including the commitment of a part of his swing to help a cause close to his heart. Woods was expected to announce his plans to open a golf academy for children with cerebral palsy and other impairments this week, but the 43-year-old has 82157476af
